presented by the ECU Outreach Program*

Interpreting the Mental Health Status Exam for Deaf Inpatients

Brian McKenny

Friday, March 19, 8:30 - 4:00 6 hours

Mental Health settings are some of the most challenging to interpreters. So much of diagnosis and treatment is found in communication. Errors in interpreting can be disastrous to the recovery process. Nowhere is this more evident than the mental status examination. Successful treatment decisions are made based on the responses made by the patient. This workshop will teach interpreters to be an integral part of the treatment team process, effectively contributing to the health of the patient. Session includes an introduction to areas measured by the Mental Status Exam; discussion of potential linguistic/cultural pitfalls; and brainstorming potential controls to these demands.

Ethical Decision Making through the Code of Professional Conduct

Brian McKenny

Friday, March 19, 6:00-9:00 3 hours

The life of a professional interpreter is a diverse one, and nowhere is this more evident than ethical decision-making. Take confidentiality, for instance. One situation may call for the strictest of secrecy, where another may require full disclosure. What is considered professional in one setting may be abhorrent in another. This workshop seeks to explore the ethical expectations found in the various fields interpreters find themselves in. Participants will explore how each tenet of the Code of Professional Conduct applies to those settings.

Speed Mentoring

Karin Lewis and Michelle Niehaus

Friday, March 19, 6:00 – 9:00 3 hours

This workshop will bring together seasoned interpreters from across the state with newer members of the field. All levels of experience are welcome. Participants will progress through a series of intentionally structured guided discussions of a sequence of interpreting scenarios through a course of multiple rounds of “think, pair, share” to learn from the expertise and experiences of colleagues and to practice asking and responding to constructive questions regarding best practices in the field of professional interpreting. Participants will be exposed to a variety of professionals with a range of specializations and experience so as to reflect upon practical and ethical issues in the profession and to develop a professional network of informal mentors for particular types of assignments and interpreting situations. Participants will practice the meta-communication skills of articulating their thought processes, ethical decision-making, and language skills so as to hone self-assessment and self-improvement skills.

Cultural and Lexical Variations of Black Signs,

Donald Tinsley

Saturday, March 20, 8:30-4:30 6 hours

This presentation will discuss the historical, cultural and lexical variation in Black signing – that is, “Do Black signers share the same signs for a concept or do they have different signs for the same concept as White signers?” Regional differences have been looked at by Woodward (1976) and Woodward (in progress). Finally, a comparison and demonstration of signs will be presented according to region, age, and economic backgrounds of signers. The issue of “code-switching” within this particular group will also be explored. Take-home tips and tools will be available after the presentation.

Hearing Voices that are Distressing

CJ Jones, Missy Runyon, and Michelle Niehaus

Saturday, March 20, 8:30-11:30 3 hours

This is a training and simulation exercise that allows participants to develop empathy for individuals with mental illness by trying to function and perform tasks while being “symptomatic.” Interpreters often ask how hallucinations affect an individual and his or her communications skills. In this workshop, participants will experience a simulation of auditory hallucinations. Each person will be asked to complete a series of tasks while wearing a headset. After completing the tasks, the group will reconvene to discuss the experience and implications for interpreting in mental health settings where consumers are experiencing hallucinations.

This workshop will be limited to 25 participants.

Overview of the KY Court System and the Role of the Interpreter

Judge Julia Adams

Saturday, March 30, 8:30 – 11:30 3 hours

A beginner-level introduction to the legal world in Kentucky. Judge Adams will generally describe the KY court system and discuss current practices regarding the provision of interpreting services to access the legal/judicial system.

Developing a Mental Health Toolkit

Michelle Niehaus

Saturday, March 20 1:30 – 4:30 3 hours

This workshop will challenge interpreters to think about the knowledge they need to work effectively in mental health settings. Participants will then engage in the “hands on” process of creating toolkits including articles regarding mental health, handouts for clinicians and other professionals in mental health settings, “Talking Points,” and other materials. Dyadic discussion will occur as pairs practice utilizing the tools in a professional, respectful way to increase their acceptance as peers on treatment teams and, ultimately, to improve the quality of mental health services Deaf consumers receive. Large group discussion of information learned and steps for future learning will conclude the event. Special thanks to Charlene Crump for sharing the Alabama “Mental Health Interpreting Portfolio” materials. This workshop relies heavily on her model.
